ANNOUNCEMENTS BREED THEATER.

Colleon Bawn Delights Immense Audiences With Its Beautiful Irish Scenery and Story.

Judging by the size of the audiences at the Breed last evening, the wonderful and beautiful drama of Ireland entitled Colleen Bawn was a great success. This exquisite picture story, taken in Ireland and every scene laid in the exact spot made famous by the great drama, is one of the most complete, thrilling and interesting features ever presented at the Breed.

The beautiful story tells that the blue waters of Killarney lakes, with all their mirrored mountains, all their islands olothed in softy massed arbutus.

their mirrored mountains, all their islands clothed in softy massed arbutus, reflected no fairer image than that of Tore Cregan, the baronial estate of the Cregans. With its hilly sweeps of woodlands and cosy stretches of bogs and its fertile farmlands, it formed a possession that well might kindle the eye with admiration and arouse envious longings in the breast of the passing travaler.

ing traveler.

But the mistress of Cregan hall knows of the heavy mortgage upon it, and is depending upon her son Hardress to marry his cousin, Anne Chute, herseif in possession of sufficient wealth to relieve the estate of its en-herself in possession of sufficient wealth to relieve the estate of its encumbrance, if Hardress can be brought to marry her.

Meanwhile Hardress has seen and secretly married Eliy O'Connor, the charming Colleen Bawn, Elly was not rifted with much book learning, but possessed a warm heart, so it was not a difficult matter to persuade her to keep the marriage a secret.

Hardress' mother becomes so persistent that Danny Mann, a simple-minded cripple who works on the Crean estate, takes it upon himself to rid his master of the Colleen.

He entices her to the lonely island and into the cave of Colleen Bawn rock, where he is about to kill her, but a hunter mistakes Danny for an otter and fires at him, wounding him, and thinking the foating object in the water to be the reward of his shot, finds his mistake and rescues Eily, bringing her to safety. The story is told completely and the various scenes in the old country are a delight to the eye and are familiar to many of the tourists who have visited there from this city.

OUR YESTERDAYS.

We've traced our sweetest dreams, my doar, in wonder fire's glow.
And never thought the pictures there were of a long ago:
Unmindful of the fleeting years we've wandered on, we too,
And you have been the same to me and I the same to you—
Your voice as sweet and hair as jet as ever, till tonight
I saw a single strand of gray deflect the ruddy light.
A single silvery strand of gray 'twas burnished by the rays.
And then I knew the time has come when we have yesterdays.

when we have yesterdays.

I had not ceased to think of you all bitthe and young and fair,
And I was strong and straight as wher I waited on you there.
Until tenight! Our youngest one sall here upon my knee
And looked into my eyes for long and studied sarnestly.
Then looked at you, and said at lengtl—my heart was fairly wrung—"I'm trying to 'magine how you looked when bofe of you were young!" I tried to laugh it all away, but, dear through all the haze.
There came the thought, "the time had come when we have yesterdays"—John D. Wells, in Delineator.

SUMMER PAST.

Cool blows the evening wind from out the west.
And bows the flowers, the last sweet flowers that bloom.
Pale asters, meny a heavy-waving Of goldenrod that bends as if opprest

The summer's songs are husbed. Up the lone shore
The weary waves wash sadly, and a grief
Sourds in the wind, like farewells fond and brief;
